

Parent-Child Communication Workshops

Attention Parents! Are your children misbehaving? Not following directions? Feeling like you are speaking a different language?

Oppositional and defiant behavior in children and adolescents can lead to concurrent difficulties in the home, with peers, and in academic functioning. Additionally, defiance is predictive of future problematic behaviors, mental health issues, and legal difficulties. Taking a proactive approach to learn to deal with your child's defiant behaviors could help reduce the risk of future problems.

We are currently offering two parenting workshops: The Defiant Child and Parent-Teen Communication. These two workshops are designed to help parents learn effective strategies to deal with the most problematic behaviors. We are recruiting parents whose children are between the ages of 6-12 years for the Defiant Child workshop, and whose children are between the ages of 13-17 years for the Parent-Teen Communication group.

The Defiant Child and the Parent-Teen Communication workshops are evidence-based curricula intended to help parents:

- Understand their child's behaviors
- Increase their child's compliance with directions
- Learn appropriate reinforcement and disciplinary strategies
- Develop problem solving strategies
- Improve communication skills
- Improve overall behavior in the home, school, and community
